ZOE BECKLEY'S INTERESTING STORY

Her Side and His—Latest Styles for Autumn Wear—Checks and Plaids Will Last All Winter—Box Plaits Smart Detail—Moire Silk Effective for Frocks.

BREAKING STRANDS.

The dinner in the lobster palace with the Manx party seemed endless to the Temples. The evening at "The Sporting Widow" was a little less of a trial, although the intermissions were periods of torture to Cora and boredom to David. The prospect of the evening coming to an end with the theater helped the Temples endure "entertainment." At the drop of the final curtain Cora heaved a scarcely audible sigh of relief.

"Now for the 'Midnight Jamboree!'" cried Manx. "I've got table A-1 reserved for our bunch, and it's us for a big time till dawn."

Cora almost cried out. David went on helping her with her wraps. "I am very sorry, Mr. Manx, but my wife and I must go on home. I have to work tomorrow," he said firmly.

Manx laughed unpleasantly. "Oh, don't you worry about work tomorrow. Do it day after tomorrow. I'll fix it up for you with Rourke. Travel with me and Trouble will sidestep you," he said significantly.

David only shook his head and bid them a brief good night. Manx looked ugly. Stepping up to David so that he could not be heard by any one else, he finished: "But if you don't string along with me Trouble will get you pretty quick, see?"

"Good night!" was David's only response. "Good night is right!" Manx said softly to himself, shaking his head at the departing Temples, an ugly look in his little pale eyes.

Manx was no utterer of idle threats. The sequel of his threat came to David the very next morning when Rourke came to him, his face clouded.

"Dave, you don't get this political game right," he said. "You can't go the frozen-mitt-frozen-face business with boys like Donnelly and Manx and get away with it. Warm up, warm up, son, or you'll get froze out."

"Mr. Rourke, I am giving you folks my knowledge as an architect. I am not offering my privacy as part of my day's work after the day's work is over," he said curtly.

Rourke stared at him. Then his eyes narrowed. "All right, then, give us some of your knowledge as an architect right now. We'll see about your privacy later," Rourke said. "Donnelly and Manx are on the committee to draw up that building code which the boys are going to put through the Board of Aldermen. They've got the code all drawn up, and it's a good little code. Now your job is to go over it with Donnelly and Manx and write out a report for the public boosting every little thing in it, get me? Donnelly and Manx and the code are in my office now waiting for you."

It had come, then; the "fly in the soup," the deciding point, the jumping off place. David's heart sank, but his blood ran hot. He had already seen the proposed building code. And a more wicked piece of rotten legislation he had never experienced. It was this code to which he was expected to lend not only his name in approval but to make out a lying case in its favor.

Rourke was regarding him sharply. David turned on him. "I'm going in there, Mr. Rourke, to look that code over," he said quietly. "But if it is what I think it is I am coming out of that room to tell you and them and the world just exactly what I really think of that code!"

THE AUTUMN FASHIONS. Checks and plaids so decidedly in fashion this summer, bid fair to last well into the winter, and one of their winter guises will be in furs. Capes are formed of two furs arranged in big checks—like black and white fox together.

When bouffant skirts first came into fashion, we all discarded our silk jersey petticoats—albeit with a sigh, because they were so well. But now silk jersey is used for petticoats as well as for frocks and suits. Its softness gives it charming lines, and by using it lavishly, and stiffening it with reeds or many ruffles, it makes admirable petticoats to go under the bouffant skirt.

Alpaca, one of the fashionable fabrics of the moment, is much trimmed with elaborate embroidery designs worked in silk.

Metal flowers of fine workmanship and real beauty, are one of the trimming novelties on autumn hats of velvet.

Moire silk is used most effectively for frocks.

Snug bodices are not by any means to rule in autumn styles, for already there are many advance models that show little regard for the waistline. But there are also some really charming models of serge—and other materials—with a snug bodice that is slightly pointed in front.

Metal ribbons are in vogue, owing to the fashion for all sort of metallic bead and spangled trimming. They will be used much on evening frocks of tulle, satin and silk.

Skirt trimming is featured on evening frocks. Flowers are much used, and frills to some extent, in holding puffs and panniers in place.

One charming detail of the new dress is a bunch of deep pink roses at the hips. Fallen petals from the flowers are strewn over the skirt, as if blown about by a summer breeze.

Don't forget a sweater of some sort to your autumn wardrobe. From all indications these convenient garments, in their present charming if somewhat expensive forms, will be much worn throughout the winter. The vogue for sport clothes that has run riot this summer will have a marked effect on winter fashions, and, of course, the sweater will come in for its share of fashion.

There is one thing, however, which we must always maintain, and that is that there shall be no action on the part of our elected representatives—no action whatever taken under pressure and under dictation—before we know what the facts are and what justice requires.

Would Rather Be Right. "I would rather stand with that principle and be defeated than yield one jot or tittle of it to get into office."

Good crowds everywhere welcomed the candidate in the three states—Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine in which he spoke today.

Hughes, still traveling under the impetus of his Nashville speech, in which he first struck out at the president's strike policy, is now throwing all the fire and force and power of his being into the campaign.

As though impelled by a spirit of desperation, he has thrown off the supreme court doctrine manner and is pounding home his arguments in true campaign fashion. He has seized upon the Adamson bill as the most effective appeal from the Republican viewpoint that the party has in sight.

Carries Crowds With Him. He is beginning to carry his crowds with him. At Beverly, Mass., this morning he opened the New England campaign with a savage attack upon the eight-hour bill. The crowd, made up in part of employees from the United Shoe Machinery company, accorded him liberal applause.

He was carried on thence to Hampton Beach, where he drove home an elaboration of the Beverly address. Next in the opera house at Portsmouth, N. H., he added fuel to the fires of his oratory, and as a climax he staked his chance of winning on his denunciation of the measure in his speech at York Harbor.

At York Harbor, too, the applause with which he was greeted all through the day reached its height. Three thousand people cheered for three minutes the Hughes "appeal to reason" at that point.

Tonight he addressed in Portland what is described as one of the biggest political audiences ever assembled in the city. The crowd was cordial, but at no time did it reach the height of enthusiasm which the audience at Hampton Beach, Portsmouth and York Harbor displayed during the day.

Speech of Raymond Robins. Before the nominee spoke (Mr. Robins addressed the crowd.

"I have no apologies to make for having been a Democrat or a Progressive," he said. "One reason why I am no longer a Democrat and do not intend to go back to the Democratic party is because I know the Democratic party too well. The economic and social issues which confront the country cannot be entrusted to a party that is under southern control. There are good men and women in the south, but southern life has not kept step with our western and northern life."

HUGHES CARRIES HIS AUDIENCES

Makes Adamson Bill Paramount Issue of the Campaign and Gets Applause.

By William Hoster.

Portland, Me., Sept. 7.—Charles E. Hughes today proclaimed the Wilson settlement of the threatened railroad strike the paramount issue of the campaign.

In an impassioned speech at York Harbor he staked his chances for the presidency upon his opposition to the Adamson bill, by which the president averted the industrial crisis.

"I deplore to the extreme," said the Republican candidate, addressing an audience of 2,000 in the opera house at Portsmouth, N. H., "the fact that in recent days that principle of arbitration has been surrendered and I say to you, fellow citizens, that transcending every other issue in the campaign is the issue that has just presented itself as to whether the government—the executive and congress—shall yield to pressure and legislate before that honest investigation which justice requires."

And then, following his declaration with an elaboration of his argument against the Wilson measure in his succeeding address at York Harbor, Mr. Hughes said:

"There is one thing, however, which we must always maintain, and that is that there shall be no action on the part of our elected representatives—no action whatever taken under pressure and under dictation—before we know what the facts are and what justice requires."

GOVERNOR WM. SPRY IN LINE FOR THE STATE TICKET

Tribune: Things around Republican state headquarters buzzed merrily yesterday afternoon and everybody was in a happy frame of mind, all because Governor Spry had agreed without the slightest protest to serve as chairman of the big Republican ratification meeting which is to be held at the Salt Lake theater on the night of September 16.

Ordinarily the announcement that one of the party leaders had agreed to preside at such a meeting would not have caused a flutter, but this was different. Rumors and more rumors had been going the rounds since the state convention that the governor was not entirely in sympathy with the ticket and would hold aloof from campaign activities. To be sure, the governor refuted one and all such reports, but the rumors kept bobbing up.

So it was with some temerity that State Chairman Glen Miller called Governor Spry over long distance telephone at Provo yesterday and tendered him the chairmanship of the meeting. Without the slightest hesitation the governor accepted and the dove of peace perched itself quickly on the window sill at state headquarters. So joyous was the feeling among the state leaders that the details of the ratification program were permitted to "go hang" for the time being, but will be worked out within the next few days.

It could not be conceived of a man as big in the state and politics and as broad minded as Governor Spry taking any other action, declared State Chairman Miller, "and my confidence was fully justified. History will repeat itself. After one of the bitterest fights in the history of the Republican party in Utah, Governor Miller was called upon to serve as chairman of a ratification meeting, after he had been defeated for the third nomination. Like Governor Spry, he justified our confidence."

State Chairman Glen Miller and Secretary Charles M. Morris are dividing their time between preparations for the ratification meeting and arranging itineraries for speakers throughout the state. Senator Sutherland's itinerary has been arranged and he is ready to start at Lehi next Monday, whether or not the automobile donated for his use by the Detroit manufacturers arrives. Information was received yesterday that the car had been delayed by rains and probably would reach here late last night or early this morning.

Nephew L. Morris, candidate for governor, will be the next to take the stump, according to present plans. Mr. Morris will begin his campaign in Cache county September 18, at Richmond. He will be at Hyrum September 19; Wellsville, September 20; Logan, September 21; Garden City in the afternoon and Laketown on the night of September 22; Woodruff in the afternoon and Randolph on the night of September 23, and at Morgan on September 25.

SCHOOL BOY DIES AFTER OPERATION

Salt Lake, Sept. 8.—Fred Lefler Norton, 12 years of age, son of S. Fred Norton, 1133 Windsor avenue, and the late Grace B. Norton, a grandson of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Lefler of this city, died yesterday noon at a local hospital, following an operation for appendicitis. Funeral services will be held Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in the Phillips Congregational church, the Rev. P. A. Simpkins officiating.

"Freddie" Norton, as he was familiarly known among his playmates, was a native of Salt Lake. He was a seventh grade pupil in the Uinta school and was a general favorite because of his sunny disposition and good scholarship.

How to avoid Operations

These Three Women Tell How They Escaped the Dreadful Ordeal of Surgical Operations.

Hospitals are great and necessary institutions, but they should be the last resort for women who suffer with ill peculiar to their sex. Many letters on file in the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., prove that a great number of women after they have been recommended to submit to an operation have been made well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Here are three such letters. All sick women should read them.

Marinette, Wis.—"I went to the doctor and he told me I must have an operation for a female trouble, and I hated to have it done as I had been married only a short time. I would have terrible pains and my hands and feet were cold all the time. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and was cured, and I feel better in every way. I give you permission to publish my name because I am so thankful that I feel well again."

—Mrs. FRED BENNE, Marinette, Wis.

Detroit, Mich.—"When I first took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was so run down with female troubles that I could not do anything, and our doctor said I would have to undergo an operation. I could hardly walk without help so when I read about the Vegetable Compound and what it had done for others I thought I would try it. I got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and a package of Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, and used them according to directions. They helped me and today I am able to do all my work and I am well."

—Mrs. THOS. DWYER, 989 Milwaukee Ave., East, Detroit, Mich.

Bellevue, Pa.—"I suffered more than tongue can tell with terrible bearing down pains and inflammation. I tried several doctors and they all told me the same story, that I never could get well without an operation and I just dreaded the thought of that. I also tried a good many other medicines that were recommended to me and none of them helped me until a friend advised me to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. The first bottle helped, I kept taking it and now I don't know what it is to be sick any more and I am picking up in weight. I am 20 years old and weigh 145 pounds. It will be the greatest pleasure to me if I can have the opportunity to recommend it to any other suffering woman."

—Miss INEZ FROELICHER, 1923 Manhattan St., North Side, Bellevue, Pa.
